

ABSTRACT

A method of caching information between work sessions for future use is described. The method efficiently determines those blocks of information least likely to be required for future use and preferentially discards such blocks from the cache when additional cache storage space is needed. The method also provides for the dynamic allocation of cache space between work sessions of different content.